POLITICAL VIOLENCE REPORT

June 2008

4 November 2008

A report by the Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum

OVERVIEW

As Zimbabwe geared up for the historic Presidential Run - Off on 27 June 2008, ZANU PF embarked on a deplorable pre-election violence campaign. The report chronicles high levels of political intolerance by all political parties but more seriously violations of human rights by the ZANU PF party. The gendered dimensions of politically motivated and state sponsored violence also become starkly clear from the reportage in this document. The report reveals gross violations of women's and children's rights at times on mere allegations of their being supporters of the opposition or the fact that their male partners or children were involved in opposition politics. Schools in most rural areas were closed as alleged ZANU PF supporters marauded through the schools displacing and frequently assaulting teachers and other education officials. Virtually all the fundamental freedoms protected by Zimbabwe's Constitution and other regional and international human rights treaties were infringed during the run up to the June 27 Run Off election. The report notes high levels of cases of torture, abductions, displacement, rape, and violations of the right to associate; activities which all seemed highly organized and orchestrated with great precision by the perpetrators.

The June report shows that there were more incidents of politically motivated and state orchestrated violence in the urban areas as compared to previous reports where such violence was perpetrated mainly in the rural areas. ZANU PF youths and members of the National Youth Service commonly known as "Green Bombers" turned on residents, particularly in the high density suburbs of Chitungwiza South, Mbare and Epworth as the party completed a full circle of a nationwide terror campaign. In a clear sign of a nation under siege, public transport operators in most urban areas were forced to operate whilst putting on ZANU PF regalia for them to retain their operating licences. The report documents 281 cases of assault and 277 cases of political intimidation and victimization. This marked a decrease from the month of May in which there were 466 cases of political intimidation and victimization.

Furthermore, the report contains information and allegations of collusion by state security agents such as the police, army and central intelligence officers with alleged ZANU PF supporters in setting up terror bases in parts of rural and urban areas. In some cases the youths reported directly to ZANU PF leaders who were alleged to be giving commands to attack. In other instances, victims were force - marched to the alleged ZANU PF leaders' homes where the attacks would be carried out.

MDC supporters were abducted from their homes, forced to attend ZANU PF meetings and to name fellow MDC supporters who were accused of 'betraying the ZANU PF struggle'. The victims were forced to surrender their MDC cards and t-shirts. The terror strategy also targeted women as the report shows six alleged rape cases in Harare Central, Bindura South, Guruve South and Makoni South. In addition, women were taken to the youths' bases and forced to cook and clean for the "comrades". Some were assaulted because their husbands and or male children were MDC activists while others were forced to live in the bush for fear of victimization. With most husbands forced to flee their homes, children were left with no parents to take care of them. In further violation of children's rights and in particular, the right to education, there were 10 cases of school closures in Matabeleland South, reported to the Forum.

A few days before the 27 June Run Off election, ZANU PF youths went on a rampage ambushing people on the streets and forcing them to recite ZANU PF slogans. Failure to recite these slogans would lead to serious beatings, as it would be a clear sign that one was not attending the ZANU PF political orientation meetings. The report also chronicles cases whereby alleged ZANU PF supporters would waylay people and confiscate their National Identity Cards in a bid to prevent them from voting. Other cunning techniques such as requesting the ID cards of suspected MDC supporters or dissenters for food distribution purposes and then confiscating them were also used during this period.

The ZANU PF led Government of Zimbabwe was on an offensive against any opposition political party activities and this was clearly shown by the refusal of the police to grant 'permission' to the MDC to hold rallies citing security reasons or lack of manpower. Those who were brave enough to attend the few MDC rallies that were organized in some parts of the country were usually waylaid and assaulted by alleged ZANU PF supporters. The worst incident was recorded on 22 June when armed army officers who had been sent to disperse MDC supporters who attended an MDC Rally at the Harare Show Grounds, heavily assaulted the victims. Further to this offensive by members of the armed forces, a group of armed ZANU PF youths reportedly descended on the same MDC supporters in order to disrupt the intended rally.

The report also documents 44 cases of unlawful arrest and a corresponding number of cases of unlawful detention, most of which were carried out at Harare Central Police Station. MDC supporters, particularly in Kuwadzana and Budiro in Harare, were arrested on false accusations, the objective being to detain, torture and instill fear in them and other would be dissenters. The arbitrary nature of the arrests was highlighted by the fact that most of the victims spent long periods in detention without charge and were denied access to legal counsel. Conditions of detention as reported amounted to cruel, inhuman, degrading treatment or punishment and in some cases possibly torture. For instance, at Harare Central Police Station there was a report of a victim who was detained in an unlit cell and denied food and water even from his relatives. In terms of high profile cases of arrests that were recorded in June, the MDC Secretary General Tendai Biti was arrested on 12 June 2008 and detained at Matapi Police Station, a prison now infamously known for the deplorable conditions in its cells. Biti was arrested on charges of treason and communicating falsehoods prejudicial to the state. In addition to the arrest of Biti, the MDC leader Morgan Tsvangirai was also arrested and detained on three occasions while on his way to address rallies in Kwekwe, Gweru and Lupane. His vice Thokozani Khupe, NCA Chairman Lovemore Madhuku and the leader of the breakaway MDC faction Arthur Mutambara also met the same fate. Eventually and due to the onslaught the MDC leader was allegedly forced to seek refuge at the Royal Netherlands Embassy on 22 June 2008, because of increased concerns over his safety.

The report shows 35 cases of torture wherein state security agents including members of the army, ZRP and the CIO were implicated. Some victims were tortured as a means of extracting information about the activities of the MDC whilst others were accused of storing firearms for the opposition. The report also documents 37 cases of abduction, the highest number of incidents reported for 2008.

There are 82 cases of property-related incidents and 55 cases of displacement. This decrease from May is attributable to the decrease in the cases of arson, which were prevalent in the rural areas in that month. Instead most of the victims lost their mobile phones and money to the ZANU PF youths who made it a point to search their victims after an assault.

The report documents an unprecedented 60 cases of alleged politically motivated murders (refer to appendix 1) which is a gross violation of the right to life vested in every person by the Constitution and embedded in international human rights law. Due to the high levels of impunity, the Forum received reports that villagers countrywide were organizing themselves into protection units against such attacks by ZANU PF supporters. This then led to increased reprisal and defensive attacks by villagers who were accused of deserting ZANU PF and being members of the opposition MDC. The Forum does not in any way applaud this kind of behavior or what transpired during this period but maintains that the state should have done more to protect citizens who came under attack from organized groups and people who were clearly identified as perpetrators. To the contrary, there were reports that the police from various stations were telling the victims to go and report to Morgan Tsvangirai, or making other cynical suggestions that they must bring their own assailants to the police station or simply that they did not have enough manpower to attend to the reported cases. Reports from some constituencies in Mashonaland Central and Mashonaland East noted that the police ignored the cases brought against ZANU PF youths and this frustrated the MDC supporters who then assaulted the ZANU PF youths. Suffice it to state; these are the provinces that saw the highest number of political violence reports since the run up to the 29 March 2008 harmonized elections. However despite the viciousness of some of the assaults and the alarming number of murders reported, there was a reduction in incidences reported from May 2008.

In the run up to the Presidential Run Off, Social Welfare Minister Nicholas Goche wrote to all aid agencies on 4 June 2008, suspending indefinitely what he termed fieldwork by NGOs and Private Voluntary Organizations. This move severely affected Zimbabweans with regards to food, medical and other humanitarian assistance that used to be rendered by these institutions. The Government erroneously and without giving evidence alleged that the organizations were involved and meddling in politics and thus needed to be stopped.

Added to the violent onslaught perpetrated by ZANU and state security agents, the MDC was denied platforms for addressing its constituents in preparation for the Run Off election. The government meddled with the running of the state electronic and print media such that the MDC's advertisements would not appear in any of the state media. Furthermore, seven journalists from the ZBC were allegedly fired on accusations of sympathizing with the MDC. According to the report in the Financial Gazette on 5 June 2008, the move was a purge of perceived "unpatriotic" workers at the state broadcaster.

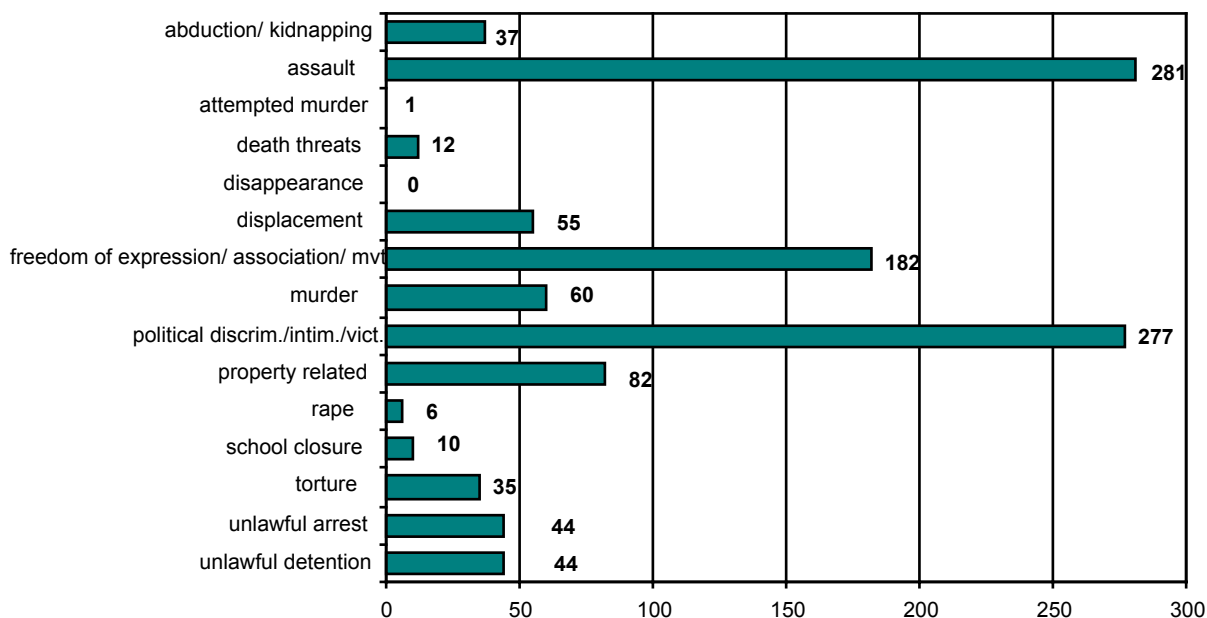

The increase in political violence against MDC supporters culminated in the withdrawal from the 27 June 2008 Presidential Run Off by MDC leader Morgan Tsvangirai, on 22 June 2008. He cited political violence and an unfair poll that that would favor Robert Mugabe. ZANU PF was aware that a one-man race would only deliver a hollow victory that is devoid of legitimacy. Tsvangirai's withdrawal was declared null and the election went ahead. ZANU PF relied on the provisions of the Electoral Act which provides for a withdrawal of a Presidential candidate in the first round. However it would be absurd to apply the same provision to a run off as it provides for withdrawal 21 days before the election date. This shows that there is a lacuna in our electoral law and comprehensive provisions should be included specific to a run off.

Robert Mugabe proceeded with the one-man race and he recorded a “landslide victory” with 2 150 269 votes as compared to Morgan Tsvangirai’s 230 000. Even on the so-called Election Day, ZANU PF youths and members of the youth militia carried out Operation Red Finger. The objective was to identify those who had not cast their vote and to force them to do so. The 27 June elections were locally and internationally condemned as shambolic and the result not a true reflection of what the people of Zimbabwe wanted. There was a hurried inauguration ceremony and President Mugabe was sworn in for a further five-year term. He left for the 11th AU Summit holding out an olive branch to the opposition party. He told the delegates at the Summit that he was ready to accept a negotiated settlement with the opposition.

The Forum notes with dismay that since the holding of the elections, there have been no official policies to deal with the scourge of violence surrounding the two elections in March and in June. There are still scores of people who are hospitalized, injured, maimed, mourning their relatives, remain disappeared, and live in fear of the unknown and the ZANU PF, police, army and other assailants. The need for the setting up of a new government that will run this country democratically and accountably cannot be overemphasized. There is need for a whole transformation of the justice and security delivery system to ensure justice, peace and security for all Zimbabweans countrywide.

NB: The Forum apologises for the late production of this report, the production of which was slowed down by the meticulous checking required for some of the entries and the late submission of some material by contributors due to their own pressures of work.
